DEPARTMENT OF LITERATURES IN ENGLISH

Dr. Anthea Morrison, BA UWI, Maîtrise Paris III, Doctorat de 3e Cycle Paris XII – Head of Department

WORK OF THE DEPARTMENT

The Department continued to offer a range of courses in Literature at both the graduate and undergraduate levels; in addition, the following new course was taught for the first time in 2006-07: LITS 2111 (E21K): Contemporary Genres: Crime and Science Fiction.

Several colleagues were able to integrate audiovisual material into their teaching, not only in the course E10F “Introduction to Film” (offered since 2005-06), although one obvious challenge faced by the Faculty in this area is the provision of adequate teaching space, appropriately equipped with the relevant technology. Other innovative teaching approaches worthy of mention include: the annual course trip to Woodside, St. Mary (home of Erna Brodber) in November 2006, by students of E21G (African / Diaspora Women’s Narrative), taught by Carolyn Cooper; and the public reading of their work by students of E26D (Creative Writing: Prose Fiction) who benefited from the opportunity, before submitting their final portfolio, to read from and hear criticism of their writing (April 19). The Department was fortunate to be able to engage writers of the stature of Dr. Erna Brodber and Professor Emeritus Mervyn Morris as lecturers in the two Creative Writing courses, E26D and E26C. In the former course, the student with the best piece of work in prose writing benefited from the inaugural “Brodber-Pollard Prize”, a yearly prize offered through the generosity of UWI alumnus, Dr. Tony McFarlane. Norval Edwards continued to contribute to the B.Ed online Distance program by teaching the courses E25C and E25D. The Department notes with satisfaction (though not with complacency!) the generally high rate of student approval reflected both in the Student Assessment forms and in its regular Staff/Student consultative meetings.

On a less pleasant note, members of staff frequently discussed, in the course of departmental meetings, the growing problem of plagiarism, and decided to take an extremely “hard-line” approach to this offense, which has been facilitated by the abundance of on-line sources on some of the literary texts studied. As a result, it was decided, at a meeting early in 2007, that the Department would circulate to all Literature majors, at the beginning of 2007-08, a statement on plagiarism prepared for the purpose by John Lennard. Discussions at the level of Faculty Board in the past year have also highlighted the challenges posed by this widespread infraction.

At the graduate level, students benefited from stimulating discussions in the context of the regular Staff/Postgraduate Seminars (efficiently organized by Michael Bucknor), which included presentations by several MA and MPhil candidates, as well as by visiting lecturers such as Dr. Honor Ford-Smith (of York University) and most recently Dr. Tanya Shields of the University of North Carolina. Two PhD students successfully defended their dissertations in the course of the academic year 2006-07: Joan Miller-Powell, supervised by Norval Edwards, defended her thesis on “‘Hybrid Inventiveness’: Caryl Phillips’ Poetics of Displacement” on August 15, 2006. On March 23, 2007, Mary Hanna defended her thesis on “Choosing Blackness? An Examination of the Writing of Jean Rhys, Michelle Cliff, and Pauline Melville” (supervised by David Williams). One other student (Harold McDermott, supervised by Norval Edwards) has submitted his Ph.D dissertation, and is expected to defend it shortly (the Viva actually took place on October 18, 2007). Despite these positive outcomes, the Department is somewhat concerned about the heavy burden represented by postgraduate supervision and teaching: frequently, one colleague may be responsible for several postgraduate students while teaching at both graduate and undergraduate levels, an overload which may slow the rate of “throughput” in terms of graduate degrees. Such concerns will have to be addressed anew when the proposed MA in Caribbean Literary and Cultural Studies is implemented, hopefully in 2008-09.

With a view to streamlining the delivery of postgraduate programmes and optimizing departmental procedures, Norval Edwards was appointed Departmental Coordinator for Postgraduate Studies; special mention should be made of the tireless efforts of this colleague, who has contributed significantly to the postgraduate program for several years.

This academic year saw the implementation of the UWI/Malmo University Exchange, a welcome linkage established by an agreement under which one member of staff from Mona (Professor Carolyn Cooper) spent three weeks teaching at Malmo in September 2006, while a Swedish counterpart (Dr. Berndt Clavier) visited Mona for three weeks in November 2006, lecturing to students in the course E23A (Key Issues in Literary Criticism I). Response to Professor Cooper’s lectures was extremely positive; at the end of his stay, which was also very successful, Dr. Clavier suggested that it might be useful for colleagues from the two universities to collaborate in co-authoring as well as co-teaching courses to be taught at their respective Universities, a proposal which the Department is considering. Perhaps the more challenging aspect of the exchange with Malmo was the exchange of students: two English majors completed semester two, 2006-07, in Sweden (where they achieved outstanding results), while two students from Malmo spent an equally fruitful semester at Mona. The hosting of the students from Malmo presented potential difficulties, in part because of concerns about security, and also because of differences in teaching methods (for example, most of their courses at Malmo did not include final examinations), which required careful monitoring of their academic progress by colleagues; in general, however, the visit of the Swedish students went very well. It is hoped that the exchange will continue at least for the next four years, for which funding has been secured by our colleagues at Malmo.

Research Awards

Dr. Curdella Forbes received the Faculty Prize for “Outstanding Research Publication” for her book From Nation to Diaspora: Samuel Selvon, George Lamming and the Cultural Performance of Gender, at the Principal’s Awards Ceremony, in January 2007.

OUTREACH

The Department’s outreach activities in 2006-07 were varied, and included the following:

• Launch of I Been There, Sort Of, by Mervyn Morris, December 2006.

Hosting (in association with the Canadian High Commission and the Jamaica National Bicentenary Committee) of lecture by Afro-Canadian scholar and writer Professor George Elliot Clarke, February 2007.

Launch (in association with WIACLALS) of Fear of Stones and other stories (short-listed for the Regional Commonwealth Writers’ Prize) by Andrew Kei Miller, March 2007.

The Department was also associated with the launch of Afua Cooper’s The Hanging of Angélique and Copper Woman (organized by the Institute of Caribbean Studies) in August 2006.

Various colleagues maintained relations with other educational institutions, giving guest lectures etc. These included the following: Norval Edwards visited Northern Caribbean University in December 2006, at the invitation of the University Council of Jamaica, to assess their English program, while Mawuena Logan also attended the December meetings in his capacity as External Examiner for that institution. Carolyn Cooper moderated a panel at a symposium on Censorship organized by the Edna Manley College of the Visual and Performing Arts (April 2007). In May 2007, David Williams was Chief Judge and Michael Bucknor a Judge for the Una Marson Award, the National Literary Competition organized by the National Book Development Council of Jamaica. Several colleagues continued to contribute to the regional CXC examination system.
